Exceeding Expectations December 2009

Christmas is a time rich with tradition. When my family gave up cutting a live tree for the artificial one, we replaced the annual hunt for the perfect tree with a new tradition. Each year, our Christmas season begins with a trip to Tis the Season in Berlin, Ohio. We will spend almost two hours walking through the facility looking at the trees, visiting Santa, and selecting special ornaments with each of our kids. These ornaments are saved from year to year and stored with the name and year of purchase. Each collection will leave with our kids as they take off to start life on their own. More important than just obtaining the item, the experience creates lasting memories.

As you get into your Christmas spirit, I recommend that you share my experience. The owner, Jo Ann Hershberger, along with dedicated staff, work constantly to bring the best Christmas ornaments and decorations into one beautiful location. The store is laid out in such a way as to make you feel you are walking through a village touring individual homes. Each display is carefully crafted for a unique decorating experience and many of the 100 trees feature unique themes. Simply walking through the three levels of the twenty thousand square foot store can take hours to see all that is offered.

Jo Ann begins each year by traveling thousands of miles to attend vendor shows and visit manufactures to find the special items for her store. Her meticulous attention to detail keeps her constantly changing displays and looking for new ways to show all that they offer. Now in its thirteenth year, Tis the Season shares the 55 acre complex with ten other unique shops and during warm months, features tours of an amish home, a scale steam engine ride and buggy rides.

Saturday, December 5th, Tis the Season invites you to attend a Christmas Down on the Farm festival. Some of the activities scheduled are build your own ginger bread house, cookie decorating, sleigh and buggy rides, make-it take-it ornaments, face painting and a visit with Santa Clause.

Whether you are looking for something special for your home this Christmas or, like me, looking to create lasting memories, visit this truly unique business. From Jo Ann and the staff at Tis the Season, Merry Christmas!
